

This is the golden 180. A massive list of example questions to be used for the speaking and writing. Many students have referenced this list as the key reason for their success on these questions. Review, practice, review, practice, review, practice--you know the drill by now.

To get the most out of this list, try about 10 to 25 questions at any one time when you study. The amount depends on your comfort level with the question and the amount of time that you have to study it. Here's the most important thing: master the answering strategy. Do not focus too much on the question and don't get bored by the long list. Allow yourself to be personal and comfortable and remember what I said earlier in my comments below the videos to question 1 and 2. Remember also that there is no question you can't answer. Yes, yes, I know; some questions are harder than others. I agree that you believe that but I disagree completely. Not to say that all questions are easy, but they are for the TOEFL. All you need to do is speak about the topic.

Think about it this way. If I asked you how to end all wars forever, could any human answer that? Not if we demand an answer that will actually work. The point is not to get lost in the question. It represents a topic that you need to discuss. Keep it simple and don't think too much. If you're having trouble with a question, write it down to practice as a review in the future and remember that it's easy; it's just our mind that's making it too hard. If you really start to struggle, review the videos for step 1 and 2 and if that doesn't help, send us an email or post a comment on FaceBook. We're here to help. Have fun with the list and remember: calm, cool, easy, simple, and fluid. Easier said than done, but you can do it.
